An Evening of Elgar

'We are the music makers, and we are the dreamers of dreams'. The opening words from The Music Makers very much reflected Elgar's view of himself as the private artist struggling isolated against the tide. In his The Music Makers, Elgar gives full rein to those introspective feelings whilst also taking the opportunity to colour the work as a retrospective of some of his most successful musical creations to date; hence quotations from The Dream of Gerontius, Sea Pictures, the First and Second Symphonies, the Violin Concerto, Nimrod and others. Performed alongside this will be the plangent Cello Concerto, contemplative, imbued with sadness, Elgar's last great work which looks elegiacally back at a changing world and one lost forever. In contrast, the Serenade to Music is a setting of words from Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice, composed by Vaughan Williams in 1938 for the 50th anniversary of Sir Henry Wood's first concert.

Julian Lloyd Webber's many recordings have received worldwide acclaim. His Brit-award winning Elgar Concerto conducted by Yehudi Menuhin was chosen as the finest ever version by BBC Music Magazine.
